TOP 5 REASONS TO MAKE A TRAFFIC ACCIDENT CLAIM

SALLY MORIN LAW

Top 5 Reasons to Make a Traffic Accident Claim

1. Completely cover your medical costs.

One of the top 5 reasons to make a traffic accident claim is to cover any and all medical treatment that is directly related to your traffic accident.

This assumes you or your attorney provide the at-fault party with sufficient documentation of these costs.

And this includes past and future medical expenses that are proven to be reasonable, necessary and directly related to the accident.

A skilled attorney can likely obtain this amount of money from the at-fault party.

But a great attorney will go one step further.

At Sally Morin Law, we leverage our years of experience and knowledge of medical care costs to negotiate down your medical obligations to insurance providers.

And that means you net more money when all is said and done.

2. Completely cover your lost earnings.

The second top 5 reason to make a traffic accident claim is to reimburse you for any actual earnings lost as a direct result of the accident.

If you indeed lost earnings at work due to your injuries, you really need to make a traffic accident claim to include those lost dollars in the claim.

Similarly, if you were forced to use company-provided sick leave or vacation days due to your injuries, you are entitled to the value of those lost paid sick/vacation days.

3. Completely cover your property damage.

The third top 5 reason to make a traffic accident claim is to get you money to pay for repairs to your vehicle and any personal property that was damaged in the accident.

Typically, this “property damage” portion of your settlement will be paid separately from the rest of your claim.

As a courtesy to our clients, we handle this portion of the claim for personal injury clients without charging a fee on your property damage claim.

Once again, this results in a higher net value for you.

4. Completely cover your attorneys’ fees and case costs.

The fourth top 5 reason to make a traffic accident claim s to cover your obligation to your personal injury lawyer for fees and costs.

You should never be stuck with a settlement that might leave you “owing” money to your attorney.

If you (or your lawyer) make a solid claim, it will be able to cover this in addition to your medical bills and lost earnings.

At Sally Morin Law, we never leave a client in this predicament and always work with them to ensure they end the case owing NOTHING to NOBODY! (Yes, this is a double-negative, but to our clients it’s a positive!)

5. Plus, leave you with something for your pain, suffering and inconvenience.

The final and most important of the top 5 reason to make a traffic accident claim is to leave you with some amount of money for having had to go through the accident in the first place.

We call this your “net” settlement – what goes in YOUR POCKET after all is said and done.

Let’s face it, your life was “diverted” and thrown off course by the accident.

You were most likely taken away from your normal routines, your favorite activities, your family, work and recreational time.

And you deserve to be fairly compensated for that.

That’s not to say you get to “cash in” on it, you simply deserve what’s fair. Determining what is fair here is based upon many factors.

However, any solid traffic accident claim you or your attorney bring should include at least some amount for this pain, suffering and inconvenience.

Obviously, at Sally Morin Law, we work tirelessly to ensure the best possible net settlement for all of our clients by fiercely negotiating with the at-fault party for the highest settlement.

And we do the same with your medical providers to insure you get the maximum reimbursement reduction.

Our end goal is the get the client back to the life they love with some money in their pocket so they can continue forward.

Don’t put your entire case reward at risk with a lawsuit that leads to costly litigation that benefits a trial attorney... BUT NOT YOU.
